Catullus 51: An English Translation

Lisa Levin
University of California, Berkeley Comparative Literature
Class of 2013

Ille mi par esse deo videtur, ille, si fas est, superare divos, quid sedens adversus identidem te spectat et audit dulce ridentem, misero quod omnes eripit sensus mihi: nam simul te, Lesbia, aspexi, nihil est super mi [vocis in ore;]

lingua sed torpet, tenuis sub artus flamma demanat, sonitu suopte tintinant aures geminae, teguntur lumina nocte.

otium, Catulle, tibi molestumst:
.otio exsultas nimiumque gestis:
.otium et reges prius et beatas perdidit urbes.

That man seems to me equal to a god. No, if I may be bold, he surpasses divinity, that man who is always seated before you to behold you and hear you laughing sweetly—which robs me in my misery of all senses: for when I look at you, Lesbia, my voice dries before reaching my lips; my tongue lies still. A delicate flame shivers down my limbs, my ears ring in the silence, and twin night drapes over my eyes.

Leisure, Catullus, is troublesome to you:
you revel in and desire leisure excessively-- Idleness has, in times past, ruined both kings and glistening cities.