DEDICATION

Mom.
You have always supported me and allowed me to become the individual I am today.
Thank you for letting me remain curious.

My Sisters: Andrea and SaraBeth.
Thank you for helping me out as I continue to be the poor student in the family.

Sue Makkoo.
Your patience, acceptance and loving support have and will continue to inspire me to be the best version of myself. You are my mentor, friend, role model and aspiration.

The Women in Costume.
To all the women who work the long hours, stay up the extra nights, drive the longest miles to reach the goal of creating a world, a breath, a life on stage. Hats off to you ladies for creating art with poise and grace: Dominique Hill, Danae McQueen and Melissa Ng.

The Teachers, Loyal Friends and Production Staff who Make it Happen:
Marybeth Ward, Hedi Jafari, Michael Francis, Jim Carmody, Mark Maltby – thank you.
Victoria Petrovich, Ian Patrick, Tara Knight, Alan Burrett, Andrei Both- thank you.
The Costume Shop- thank you.
Chris S. Murillo, Jenna Carino, Lily Bartenstein, Chris Lundahl, Sam Mitchell- thank you for helping me survive Grad School.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge all those involved in supporting, directing and aiding my path to where I am today. Jeff Brandenburg, my high school teacher with whom I have remained in contact since I graduated in 2008. Brandenburg has continued to be selfless in caring for me, teaching me and continuously proofing my work; from high school through grad school. He is the man who has held open doors allowing me walk through to opportunities.

I would like to acknowledge three strong women, Britt, Ann and Vickie, my college professors who helped me begin my journey into Costume Design. Britt Andreatta: When I took her first year LEAP class, she helped me find my sense of self as a young adult and introduced me to Ann Bruice when I expressed my interest in costuming. Ann Bruice: an honorable, selfless, humble designer/lecturer. Bruice dedicates herself to her students’ success and her mentorship gave me the confidence in myself to continue to feed my passion. Vickie Scott: a powerhouse, my mama bird who defended and vouched for me as I applied to grad schools. Scott and Bruice together exposed me to my own potential and were huge contributors to my acceptance to UCSD.

I acknowledge Judy Dolan, a woman I have had the privilege of learning from. Dolan taught me to see, to question, and to find the poetic simplicity within the art form. She is brilliant. I admire her and will be forever grateful that she took the chance to have me in this program.

MR BURNS:

Act One, Present Day: The introduction of these very different people meeting under extreme circumstances provided an opportunity to use the actors’ preexisting character traits. Costumes are not clothing, they represent character. Each item on each actor’s body exposes bits of who they are and how they have coped with the fall of society.
Act Two, Seven Years Later: Without power, but with years to reestablish livable conditions, these same characters created a system of survival. Scavenged assortments of random fashions show what was once luxury has been defaced for functionality.

Act Three, Seventy-Seven Years Later: With the establishment of culture over the preceding seven decades, items and colors have evolved to express greater spectacle and magnificence. Natural fibers and hand-made items create touches of this future “fashion.”

BURIAL AT THEBES:

Each character’s silhouette is built around the images we see so frequently on the news, in papers and in social media. Color is the distinguishing factor to visually delineate class and position within the dress of a contemporary world. Harking back to clothing shown in classical art, the royal-presidential family imitates colors of Greek “Red-Figure” pottery: red, black, and orange. These became the colors of Thebes. Those of lower status were muted in a gray wash, much like the white and gray of statues in classical art. The clean, contemporary style lines built to sculpt each body with a tightly controlled color palette, aim for poetic simplicity.
